Family-Run Companies Remain at Heart of U.S. Business

by RONNI WILDE — CBN Reporter

While the past two years have been challenging for all businesses, those owned and operated by family members may enjoy a benefit that their counterparts don’t have: At the end of the day, relatives who work together can support each other in ways that non-related workers likely do not. Problems can be discussed during off hours or perhaps around the kitchen table, and healthy families running a business together can lean on one another to help get through the tough times.

An article in Inc.com states that according to the U.S. Bureau of the Census, about 90 percent of American businesses are family-owned or controlled, and other sources put it at 80-90 percent.

by SIMON MATHER — CBN Feature Writer

Place is gathering toward realizing the vision of a Bend-based Oregon State University – Cascades (OSU-Cascades) “Innovation District” initiative set to supercharge student and business opportunities by bringing academic resources and industry together.

Business and community leaders recently attended a market sounding meeting at the Edward J. Ray Hall on the OSU-Cascades campus, in-person and virtually, to explore the dynamics for a future integrated Innovation District touted as a powerful workforce and economic development tool.

Presenters included representatives from OSU-Cascades, Economic Development for Central Oregon (EDCO) and Fratzke Commercial Real Estate Developers.

With a completed master plan for the Innovation District, the university held the forum to seek companies, real estate developers and community leaders interested in working with the institution to develop such a successful collaboration.

Innovation Districts — described by the Brookings Institute as “geographic areas where leading-edge anchor institutions and companies cluster and connect with smaller companies,"

LRS Architects Designs New Bunkhouse Hotel in Madras

By the beginning of next year, the Madras community will be welcoming and accommodating additional guests at the new Bunkhouse Hotel. LRS Architects has completed all design documents for this three-story 50-room hotel, and construction has already commenced. Amenities will include a breakfast lounge on the top floor with expansive views to the east and an indoor/outdoor fireplace to lounge and enjoy the view along with a spacious deck.

The plan was to create a destination for people to enjoy Madras and the surrounding area, creating an attractive place to stay. The client envisioned a rustic design to support the Bunkhouse theme of Western motif. Design features of natural materials will include reclaimed barnwood, creating a unique weathered appearance that comes in a wide range of grey tones, and brick flooring inside and on the third-floor deck, and natural stone throughout.

Griffin Construction is the general contractor for this project, and will be completed by the end of this year.

Funding for the Deschutes River Conservancy (DRC) was included in a $20.5 million package for a suite of 13 drought resiliency projects in five Western states. The Deschutes Basin was the only project site to be selected in Oregon.

The funding will be used by the DRC, its irrigation district partners in the Deschutes Basin Board of Control and its municipal partners within the Central Oregon Cities Organization, to formalize and operate a Water Bank that can deploy a suite of time and resource-efficient mechanisms to move water between users and the river, to meet the most pressing demands. The Bank will rely wholly on voluntary actions and will be locally controlled by bank partners, including the irrigation districts that hold the majority of the water rights in the basin. Bank activities will be focused on restoring critical streamflows, assuring that farmers get the water they need to grow crops and securing future on restoring critical streamflows, assuring that farmers get the water they need to grow crops and securing future

At a recent Bend City Council meeting, Councilors approved a contract with NeighborIsnt to operate a temporary shelter that will add up to 40 additional shelter beds in Bend through May of this year. The temporary shelter, located at 2346 NE Division Street, will open later this month and provide guests access to case management and a pathway to stable housing. Opening the temporary shelter is in response to the lack of capacity at the shelter located on NE Second Street. It also supports continued public health efforts to reduce the spread of COVID-19 in the community.

This temporary shelter is located at the motel we purchased with the state funds through Project Turnkey,” said Recovery Strategy & Impact Officer Carolyn Eagan. “It will still eventually be used as a permanent emergency shelter, but we have an immediate need for more temporary shelter beds now. That’s why we’re using it as a temporary shelter until renovations can be completed and we open it as a permanent emergency shelter this fall.

The contract with NeighborIsnt is not to exceed $200,000. It is funded from the portion of the City’s General Fund that was authorized for housing and houselessness services. The City will submit for reimbursement from FEMA for any approved expenses related to this contract.

City Council has a goal to create housing or facilities to house 500 homeless individuals on a temporary or permanent basis. Also at the meeting, Councilor Megan Pershing shared a status update on the City’s temporary housing strategies. Because of the broad community interest in housing and houselessness, Councilors have added a new standing agenda item to Council business meetings to provide regular updates on work the City is doing to address houselessness. In addition to the Division Street Shelter (Project Turnkey), updates provided above, highlights from the February 2 update included:

1) Efforts to increase temporary housing capacity
- Outdoor Shelters: A contract to begin Phase I of the process of creating two outdoor shelter sites (a Senior Women’s Shelter with ten sites, location TBD and a Tiny Home Units of six sites, location TBD), is anticipated to come before Council on March 2.
- Second Street (a designated permanent warming shelter) Operated by Shepherd’s House with a capacity of 90 beds, the facility is consistently full. The City has received a proposal to operate location as Navigation Center and that contract anticipated to come before Council on March 16.
- Temporary Shelter (Rainbow Hotel): The Council approved the purchase last month of this hotel for a potential of 40-60 rooms. Closing is anticipated in the spring, following due diligence. The City will issue a “Request for Proposals” (RFP) from organizations that could operate the facility, potentially open this summer.

2) Efforts to improve efficiencies and partnerships
- City Councilors and Deschutes County Commission members met recently and reviewed a narrative and strategic plan proposed by the Emergency Homelessness Taskforce. There was unanimous support to continue moving forward with the efforts to form a Collaborative Office on Homelessness.
- HB1213 to fund Collaborative Office: The City of Sisters, La Pine and Redmond have all been named in the bill along with the City of Bend and Deschutes County; there are seven other City/City/County pilot sites listed in the bill, which is being considered in the legislative session.

3) Efforts to manage the City’s rights-of-way to improve health and safety
- City staff continue to meet regularly with area service providers to coordinateless individuals and assess challenges in providing support for individuals camping throughout the city.
- Over a recent week, the team had 72-hour notices in more than 20 areas along Second Street between Emerson and Irving for reasons including garbage, debris, obstructions in the right of way or things that obstruct clear vision at street intersections, driveways and alleys.
- Contractor Central Oregon Bio Solutions was on site recently for clean-up efforts.

Deschutes County Commission

Deschutes County is seeking residents who are interested in serving on the Deschutes County Budget Committee. Applications will be accepted through February 28.

Budget Committee members hear directly from department directors, staff and organizations about the county’s programs and services. The committee makes recommendations to the Board of Commissioners about how Deschutes County can best use its resources to serve the community. Residents who have an interest in the programs and budget process of the County are encouraged to apply. Meetings are focused on the bigger picture — understanding the County’s programs, services, discussing challenges and opportunities that departments are considering in their budget process and providing input on key budget decisions for the next year.

“We encourage residents of diverse backgrounds to consider applying to serve on the Budget Committee,” said Nick Lealak, County administrator. “These are important positions that have a meaningful impact on the County’s programs and service delivery”.

There are two vacancies on the Budget Committee to complete two-year terms:
- To serve through December 31, 2022. This position may be reappointed for a full three-year term from January 1, 2023 through December 31, 2023.
- To serve through December 31, 2024.

Committee volunteers typically attend five to seven meetings between December and the end of June, including up to four days of meetings in late May/early June. Additional meetings may be called if necessary. Members are responsible for reviewing documents on their own time to prepare for sessions, which are held during business hours. Committee members are not paid for their time.

The Deschutes County Commission approved additional American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) investments for projects that total more than $1.2 million.

“We’re excited to be able to use these funds to invest in supporting the Oasis Village shelter project and maintaining a high level of service for the ongoing COVID-19 response,” said Commissioner Pat Adams.

ARPA investments approved by the Board of Commissioners include:
- $367,500 to support Oasis Village as they work to acquire a property to offer a shelter village with ten units, kitchen, laundry and restroom facilities.
- $840,260 to support three additional staff for the Deschutes County Health Services COVID-19 response team.
- $1.2 million.

“Oasis Village is an exciting opportunity for the Board to invest in much-needed transitional housing and leverage County property in Redmond” said Commissioner Tony DeBone.

To date, Commissioners have obligated $136.2 million in ARPA investments.

“This public health investment allows staff to maintain COVID-19� service providers to coordinate less individuals and assess challenges in providing support for individuals camping throughout the city. We encourage residents of diverse backgrounds to consider applying to serve on the Budget Committee,” said Nick Lealak, County administrator.

Injured Employees Present Compliance Juggling Act for Employers

When an employee suffers an injury, employers must navigate a complicated web of rules to determine what their obligations are under state and federal law. The laws most frequently implicated by an employee's injury are workers' compensation, the Family and Medical Leave Act, the Oregon Family Medical Leave Act, Oregon Sick Leave, the Americans with Disabilities Act and Oregon disability laws. Employers have concurrent responsibilities under these laws, and it is a common pitfall for an employer to dutifully manage their obligations under one law, but fail to address their obligations under another.

Workers' Compensation

Work-related, on-the-job injuries — referred to as "compensable injuries" — may result in an employee filing for workers' compensation benefits and taking a leave of absence, sometimes for an extended period of time. The paramount obligations for an employer whose employee suffers a compensable injury is to avoid any discrimination or retaliation against the worker and to honor any reinstatement and/or reemployment rights.

In Oregon, employers with 21 or more employees generally must reinstate an injured employee to their former position at the conclusion of the employee's leave. If, due to a bona fide business reason, an employee's former position has been eliminated, the employer must offer the worker the most suitable vacant position available.

Employers with six or more employees generally must re-employ an employee who is disabled from performing the duties of their former position at the conclusion of their leave to employment that is both available and suitable.

Family and Medical Leave (FMLA & OFLA)

Generally, FMLA applies to employers with 50 or more employees and OFLA applies to companies with 25 or more employees. Covered employers are required to provide employees 12 weeks of job-protected leave under certain circumstances. In the context of an employee's own injury, the employer may be eligible for protected family leave if they have worked for the employer for a long enough period of time and average at least 25 hours per week during the qualifying period. An employee's leave for a compensable injury would be covered by workers' compensation leave, but also may be covered by FMLA (but not OFLA). A non-compensable injury could qualify an employee for protected time off under both FMLA and OFLA if the injury meets the definition of a "serious health condition." An injury can be considered a serious health condition for many reasons, but this commonly occurs when an employee is unable to work for three or more consecutive days due to their condition.

Oregon Sick Leave (OSL)

An injured employee may qualify for Oregon sick leave. OSL is protected leave, and for employers with ten or more employees, or with six or more employees in Portland, the leave must be paid. Employees accrue at least one hour of paid sick leave for every 30 hours they work up to 40 hours per year. While an employee is generally eligible for sick leave when they are on OFLA/FMLA leave, the reverse is not always true as an employee may use sick leave while not using OFLA and/or FMLA.

ADA

An injured employee may also be considered disabled under the ADA. Oregon's disability laws are to provide reasonable accommodations to disabled employees to allow them to fulfill the essential functions of their job. One common (but avoidable) mistake that employers make is to deny leave to an employee who has exhausted or is not eligible for leave under FMLA or OFLA, when leave could serve as a reasonable accommodation.

Counting the number of employees to determine whether one of the above-mentioned laws applies can be tricky as they rely on different methods of counting. Further complicating the analysis is when multiple businesses are considered "integrated" into a single operation, when a business has owners or partners who are classified as employees, and when a business utilizes independent contractors that could be considered employees.

Another common pitfall employers face with injured workers face with injured workers is addressing performance issues or moving forward with a termination around the same time that an employee invokes their rights (generally referred to as engaging in protected activity). When an employee engages in protected activity and then suffers an adverse employment action such as a termination, discipline, or reduction in pay, they may claim discrimination or retaliation. While an employer may have legitimate adverse employment action such as a termination, discipline, or reduction in pay, employers must be careful to not engage in behavior that could be considered retaliation.

Navigating the laws implicated by an injured worker can present a juggling act. Once an employer becomes aware that they have an injured employee — no matter the cause of the injury — the employer should engage with an employment attorney to ensure that the proper steps are taken to remain in compliance with all applicable laws.

Duke Warner Real Estate Market Trend Report

While the new year now in full swing in Central Oregon, Bend’s real estate market remained brisk in January with the number of active listings down 23 percent while at the same time pending properties increased five percent and sold properties were down 30 percent from December’s pace. The real estate trends remain positive though due to many homebuyers’ abilities for remote working and where many are able to upscale their lifestyle as compared to urban metropolitan areas. In Duke Warner Realty’s monthly Trend Reports we offer valuable insights by analyzing last month’s real estate market activity in Central Oregon. This information can be a beneficial resource for any upcoming or changing trends we might see during the first half of 2022.

January Inventory and December Activity

With 110 active listings as of January 1, the Bend market saw a 23 percent decrease in available listings, down from 143 from the previous month. Pending homes were at 131, down from 172 from the previous month but homes still continue to sell at a very impressive pace, leaving some potential homebuyers empty-handed and ready to buy on the spot. Now is an excellent time for a homeowner who might otherwise wait until spring to list a home for sale. Both Bend and Redmond’s current listings are being snapped up very quickly, with average days on market at only 25 days and 26 days respectively. Redmond’s active listings as of January 1 showed 57 homes active, down from 71 in December. As we progress through the remaining winter months, we see the combined active listings for Central Oregon at 167 homes.

January numbers for the Redmond market shows us 51 homes sold, 81 new homes on the market, up from 52 from the previous month, and 90 homes pending, up from 71 from the previous month. The bulk of active homes on Redmond’s market remain in the $525,000 & up price range, showing 40. The $225,000-$325,000 had no active listings, the $425,000-$525,000 range had ten active listings and the $325,100-$425,000 price range showed only seven active listings. For Bend, the numbers in January continued to illustrate a market with relatively low inventory. There were no active listings in the $225,000-$325,000 range, and only two in the $325,100-$425,000 range, five in the $425,100-$525,000 range and 12 in the $525,100-$625,000 price range. The $625,000-$725,000 had 22 active listings, the $725,000-$825,000 had 16 active homes and the $825,000-$925,000 showed 18 active homes listed. Our Market Trend Report shows there was a decrease in homes available in the higher price ranges, showing 35 homes in the $925,100-and-up price range. For Central Oregon overall, the supply and demand are not equally matched as more out-of-state buyers are able to relocate to our beautiful area. It truly is a very healthy seller’s market for those homeowners considering selling their property for top value.

With a fast-paced market, buyers often look for competitive pricing as they consider properties. If you are selling your home and trying to price your property, we encourage you to consult with your trusted Duke Warner Broker for seasoned, expert advice. Our brokers will share their experience, knowledge and excitement while they work for you. Our Duke Warner brokers know how to price propertiesaccording to the market trends and current housing competition.

Sold and Pending Listings

Bend had 177 pending homes in January, up from 168 in December. These numbers still highlight the need for more listings to keep up with the demand to buy a new home in Central Oregon. For sold listings in Bend, there were 131 in January, as compared to 172 in December. In Redmond, we saw 51 sold in January, down from 80 sold in December. History in the making as we continue to see real estate needs escalating in the Bend and Redmond real estate market!

Sunriver Brewing Company will open its fourth pub at Neff Place in Bend. The Eastside Pub, which will occupy the former Jackson’s Corner space, is scheduled to open before summer of this year. The location at 1500 NE Neff Road sits across from the St. Charles Hospital campus.

“We started our search to find an Eastside location back in 2019,” says Karin Devencenzi, CEO of Sunriver Brewing Company. “We’ve always been grateful to have the opportunities to serve our beer from “grain to glass,” and our pubs let us do that. The challenges of the last two years put growth on the back burner, and we’re all thrilled to have a fun project on the horizon. We hope to hire about 65 people.”

The Eastside Pub is 4,000 square feet and will seat about 120 inside and another 40 outside on a dog-friendly patio. “We are focusing on a number of exciting new concepts” says Jay Junkin, owner of Jackson’s Corner. “When Sunriver Brewing approached us about the space, we thought what a great opportunity to bring these visions to life. We are full of such gratitude to have been able to serve and connect with so many incredible beings!” said Junkin.

“We are looking forward to being part of another wonderful neighborhood,” continued Devencenzi. “We are so grateful for our team and for everyone who has supported us over the last decade, especially the last two years. We’re really happy to put more of our energies into what we love doing...celebrating great beer and food with our community.”

The pub will be pouring Sunriver Brewing core brands along with many limited release and seasonal beers. “I’ve spent the best 17 years of my life in Central Oregon, the majority of which I resided in the great neighborhoods of East Bend — lots of fond memories from homes in the Larkspur, Mountain View and Orchard districts,” says Brett Thomas, director of Brewing Operations. “The entire Sunriver Brewing team is looking forward to sharing our culture of quality and bringing our award-winning craft beer to our new neighbors on the Eastside of town,” said Thomas.

Buccola Brothers: From Late-Night Ping Pong to Co-owning & Operating RE/MAX Key Properties Oregon

BY PONNI WILDE — CBN REPORTER

Growing up, brothers Ryan and Tim Buccola had such a great relationship that their father would often have to come into their room at 2 in the morning to break up their friendly ping-pong matches.

Since that time, the brothers, as well as other members of the family, have pursued careers in real estate, following in their father's footsteps. "Our father has been a broker our whole lives, so we were raised this way; he was a fantastic mentor," says Tim. "Our sister is a broker and office owner in the Bay Area, and our mother, Candé Buccola, is CFO of RE/MAX Key Properties Oregon. This really runs in the family; it runs deep in our genes."

In 2015, Ryan and Tim were working in the industry and say they sensed a shift in the market following the recession, so they purchased RE/MAX Key Properties Oregon. "We saw a good business opportunity, and wanted to expand our field and experience, having had a large real estate group prior. We were ready to apply those principles and culture to a broader spectrum," says Ryan. "From an ownership standpoint, we are second-generation real estate brokers. We grew up in the business, and we really know what a real estate office should look like, how it should feel, etc. We were ready to share that with others from a broker's standpoint."

Ryan says their model in taking ownership of RE/MAX Key Properties Oregon — a full-service real estate brokerage specializing in residential, luxury, commercial, new construction and ranch and land properties — was to provide a platform for drama-free, producing brokers. "Our marketplace has seen exponential growth in numbers in terms of licensed brokers, but that doesn't necessarily translate into quality brokers. Our challenge is aligning with and recruiting top-notch brokers to our brokerage," Tim adds. "We are not just from a numbers standpoint, but from an ethics and work ethic standpoint; we are not necessarily looking for the most top-producing brokers; we are looking for quality and people who are in it for the right reasons; they will rise to the top. It just takes time and work."

So far, business is fantastic, agree the brothers. "We've had excellent growth since the purchase," says Ryan. "We've been in ownership for six years. It's taken that long to really establish RE/MAX Key Properties Oregon as dependable and trustworthy operators, and we truly work on behalf of our brokers as a family."

In October 2021, the company announced the purchase of its new Bend headquarters at 42 Greenwood Avenue. Renovations are under way, with an expected opening date in August 2022. The 9,468-square-foot site will nearly double the operational space of RE/MAX Key Properties' current location on Franklin Avenue and provide an elevated experience for brokers and their clients.

"This project is an exciting step forward, for our brokerage and for this section of Greenwood Avenue within the downtown core," says Ryan. "For us, maintaining and keeping the company culture aligned with their values. "As we grow, our challenge is to provide an environment and the support that brokers really thrive in. Some of our greatest successes are knowing where we want to be internally, from our operations and management to the front office and marketing," he says. "Over time and through pointed decision-making, we have come to a point where our operations and employee culture are in line with the values of the company we wanted to be when we purchased RE/MAX. Ryan adds, "I would add that our greatest triumphs are seeing brokers who are in line with our vision and culture coming to RE/MAX and thriving; seeing production and commissions increase; and having the resources here 24 hours per day to be successful."

When they aren't working, the Buccolas enjoy the recreational activities Central Oregon offers. Tim loves camping with his wife and three sons, hiking, whitewater rafting and fly fishing. He also enjoys horseback riding, lavender farming, ranch sorting and team penning and raising cattle and quarter horses. Ryan is an avid snowboarder and fly fisherman, and is active in a number of professional memberships as well as volunteering.

In owning, running and developing a business with a family member, Tim says there are a lot of highs and lows, but that having a partner who is a brother makes the journey better, easier and more fulfilling because of the successes they get to share with each other and their family. "I would say that we have a really strong relationship," says Ryan. "We continue to work together to check each other and work through hard things and fun things from different perspectives. In the end, we think we have a really strong partnership."

From an ownership standpoint, the Buccolas have shared rooms, bunk beds, offices, etc. We are in step together a lot. We really enjoy what we do. This is a lot of fun for us."

In owning, running and developing a business with a family member, Tim says there are a lot of highs and lows, but that having a partner who is a brother makes the journey better, easier and more fulfilling because of the successes they get to share with each other and their family. "I would say that we have a really strong relationship," says Ryan. "We continue to work together to check each other and work through hard things and fun things from different perspectives. In the end, we think we have a really strong partnership."
Family Business

The article goes on to say that these businesses can range in size from two-person partnerships, such as husband-wife teams, to Fortune 500 or other gigantic firms (think Wal-Mart Stores Inc. and Ford Motor Co.), and they account for half of the nation’s employment and half of its gross national product.

Here are some interesting statistics about family businesses, as reported on startupsanonymous.com:

- 60 percent of the U.S. workforce is employed by a family-owned business.
- Family-owned businesses are responsible for creating 78 percent of all new jobs in the U.S.
- Only 30 percent of family-owned businesses last until the second generation, and only 12 percent will make it to the third generation.
- 47 percent of people who own a family business are planning to retire within the next five years but don’t have any kind of succession plan in place.
- Family businesses are contributing more than half (57 percent) of the total U.S. gross domestic product.
- Just under 20 percent (19.3) of U.S. firms are family-owned.
- Of the family firms that reported an annual growth rate of more than 10 percent in the year 2018, more than 80 percent also reported having a clear sense of purpose and agreed-upon values within their business.
- Almost three-quarters (74 percent) of family businesses report a strong sense of culture and values.
- 24 percent of family businesses are led by a woman who holds the rank of president or CEO.
- More than a third (31.3 percent) of family businesses have designated a woman as their successor.
- Just under 50 percent of family-owned businesses have women in top management positions within the company.
- The number of family businesses owned by women has increased by 37 percent in the last five years.

Priorities for Family Businesses

According to PwC (pwcn.com), an organization that provides professional services across two segments — including trust solutions such as assurances and tax services and consulting solutions — family businesses in the U.S. saw relatively strong performances over the financial year pre-COVID-19, with 63 percent experiencing growth. The report, taken from PwC’s 2021 Family Business Survey, says that looking forward, “82 percent expected to see growth in 2021, and 96 percent anticipate the same in 2022.”

The survey report goes on to say that when asked to name their top priorities for the next two years, “Family businesses list expanding into new markets or client segments (57 percent) as their top priority, followed by introducing new products or services (50 percent). The other priorities that fill out the top five are pursuing strategic acquisitions or mergers (45 percent), increasing the use of new technologies (43 percent) and rethinking or revising the business model (43 percent).”

On the Family Business United website (familybusinessunited.com), there are several byproducts of the pandemic that have caused family businesses to set new priorities, including diversification-led acquisitions, acceleration of succession and responding to a growing shareholder base. PwC concurs with this finding, saying in its report that most of the decision-makers it surveyed say that “diversification is essential to moving forward to help family businesses manage risk by avoiding having all of their eggs in one basket.” The report adds that the pandemic has “driven increased urgency for families to diversify their portfolio of investments, which is now seen as key to protecting their future legacies.”

Challenges for Family-Owned Businesses

While family businesses can thrive because of the familial ties, there are also certain challenges in running a company with relatives. An article published on familybusinessmagazine.com says that emotions and family dynamics can bleed into operational objectives, but that those hurdles can also strengthen both the organization and the family relationships. The article, written by Chad Goodfellow, CEO of a company that has spanned four generations, states, “One of the biggest sources of conflict for many family businesses ties to company growth and profit distributions, and another challenge is conflict resolution.” In the cases when those kitchen-table conversations aren’t so pleasant, Goodfellow says that “well-organized, fun and focused family meetings to communicate about each family member’s holdings and financial standing” can be key. He goes on to say that setting clear boundaries, and defining and documenting roles and responsibilities, can help family members stay in their lane.

The PwC website says that a further challenge with family businesses is that they have traditionally been slow to change, which makes attracting and retaining talent more difficult. PwC reports, “A growing number of workers are attracted to organizations that offer more digital skills, more inclusivity and more flexibility. For younger generations in particular, the employee experience is becoming almost as much of a priority as the pay scale. Family businesses that fail to provide a path to digital upskilling risk losing out in the intense competition for talent.” To address this, PwC says 80 percent of family businesses surveyed say they “use technology to drive efficiency and collaboration in the business or to access relevant data for improved decision-making, and 65 percent have invested in required digital capabilities for employees.”

In a Harvard Business Review article titled A Crisis Playbook for Families, authors Josh Baron and Ben Francois say that family businesses “differ from other companies in that their form of ownership gives them the ability to take critical actions that could help them through these difficult times.” The article states, “In a business crisis, the power of family business owners is magnified. Unlike public companies, which typically focus on maximizing shareholder value, family owners value objectives that usually go well beyond financial returns (e.g., family legacy, reputation). This crisis is forcing family businesses to make trade-offs among those objectives that would have previously been unimaginable — all while dealing with the complex dynamics of a family.” The article continues, “The stress, anxiety and fear that come out in a crisis can amplify already challenging dynamics... On the other hand, the crisis can be a call to action, causing family owners to ‘rally around the flag’; put aside their differences and take actions that allow the business to survive.”

The Four “P”s of Administering Your Mom or Dad’s Estate

by NEIL LANGLOIS, CPA — Jones & Roth CPAs and Business Advisors

Administering our loved one’s estate is one of the more challenging things that will ever be asked of us. During the process, we are in mourning, we do not have all the answers and we are already busy with what makes us who we are as a person. Administering an estate can be a relatively short period in our lives, but it can also span several years. Several factors contribute to the complexity and the amount of time an estate will take to administer. Let’s take a look at four of those factors: planning, professionals, property and people (The Four “P”s) and how to move through them while administering an estate.

The Four “P”s

PLANNING

The steps you’ll need to take in order to administer your loved one’s estate will largely depend on the type of planning that had been done before they passed. The two forms of planning that are most common around one’s estate are wills and trusts.

- WILL

A will helps us administer one’s estate because it communicates to us the person’s wishes and provides for the distribution of certain property. However, a will cannot transfer assets without involving a court process called probate. If only a will has been left, and there are assets (cars/houses/investment accounts) needing to be transferred, some form of probate may be needed.

- TRUSTS

A trust helps a trustee carry out the wishes of a grantor (mom/dad) by giving specific directions of how to distribute the assets that the trust owns. If all the assets of mom and/or dad are properly titled in the trust, probate may be avoided all together. The trust and the trustee will have all the power and authority they need to properly distribute the assets. However, if plans are not clearly understood by the beneficiaries, challenges to the estate administration arise. An example of these challenges may be the specific directions of how to distribute the assets that the trust owns.

What happens if mom and dad do very little planning, or no planning at all? These situations do tend to make for a longer estate administration. If there are assets, then probate will most likely be necessary to distribute property. The process of distributing the estate will look to state laws and precedents, and it will seek testimony from all who believe they have a claim to the assets of the estate. Some property may be distributed outside of probate if beneficiaries were assigned. For financial assets like retirement and bank accounts, there are often beneficiary designations. If these assets have beneficiary designations, those directions will supersede a will or trust’s plan.

PROFESSIONALS

Estate administration is not a DIY endeavor. At some point you will need to enlist the help of professionals, such as: an attorney, CPA, appraiser or a financial planner. Professionals will help you file the appropriate court docs, title transfers and tax filings. Professionals who specialize in estate and trust administer countless estates throughout a year. Compare this to a first-time administrator, executor or trustee, who may do this only once in their lifetime. Good estate professionals will help guide you through all steps of administering your parents’ estate. They will save you time and sanity by keeping you on task, explaining next steps and keeping you from thinking you need to learn everything there is to learn about estate administration.

PROPERTY

The type of property in an estate is one of the other major factors that determines how long it will take to properly administer an estate. Some property, like a bank account with a transfer on death clause, is relatively easy to transfer. A death certificate will allow the bank to transfer the funds to whomever is named as the beneficiary of the account. No court or trust document is needed in most cases.

Property like a house can be a more difficult asset to transfer. A house has a title or deed. For a title to be transferred, there needs to be a document or a court order to enable the transfer. Location of property can also be a factor. Property in more than one state or jurisdiction could lead to needing more than one probate court. Collectibles and rare items may need specialized appraisals to help determine value before an estate can be distributed. The more complexity there is with the underlying property of an estate, the more important planning becomes.

PEOPLE

The specific people involved in the estate will have an impact on the timeline of administering an estate. Those who were close to mom or dad are generally also beneficiaries of the estate (or they may think they should be). However, if plans are not clearly understood by the beneficiaries, challenges to the estate administration arise. An example of these challenges may be as simple as the question of who gets mom’s china set, while others may be more complex, like making a decision to keep or sell a large asset. The people involved can be unpredictable and hard to plan for every possible outcome. As an estate administrator, your professional advisors can help you make informed decisions when faced with tough challenges.

Administering Your Mom or Dad’s Estate

Now that we’ve looked at the Four “P”s of estate administration, understanding how to administer an estate should be a little clearer. Here is a brief summary of the process.

To administer an estate, you will want to identify all planning that has Emergence PT is a new physical therapy and high-tech training center in Redmond that is unique in the United States.

Founder Sean Roach says, "Emergence PT takes a three-point approach to help its patients achieve and maintain physical recovery and optimize fitness goals."

Roach and his daughter, Jordyn Roach, opened Emergence PT in Central Oregon in December 2021 having moved from Eugene to plant the new family business in the midst of athletes, runners and strength trainers.

He explains, "Redmond was chosen for its supportive community and the opportunity to bring outstanding practitioners and educators to an area that appreciates our comprehensive approach."

The facility consists of three primary components. Physical Therapy evaluates and treats musculoskeletal disorders — pain, stiffness and weakness. The Performance Center enables a patient to increase strength, power and fitness with a multitude of top-of-the-line equipment — a full weight gym and 21st Century measuring devices to gauge progress towards individual goals.

The third component — The Data Lab — contains engineering/electronic equipment and devices to measure the movements of individual joints to the communications systems between the brain and muscles.

Roach clarifies: "All of the equipment is real time and can be synchronized for the evaluation of complex tasks such as running. All three components are used for all clients and patients."

Jordyn Roach, a professional cinematographer, designed the impressive complex. She integrated the hardware of large weights and racks with the spacious performance lab that is equipped with video cameras and display monitors to convey real-time external and internal movement of muscles, bones and tendons as a client lifts or runs.

Her father explains, "From real-time motion-capture powered form and force analysis to strength and endurance measuring machines, we have everything for even Olympic-level athletes."

Roach singles out Bruce Barrett, Windermere-Redmond commercial real estate professional, for locating the space, utilities and patient access attributes Emergence PT required to launch the PT and training center in Redmond.

Roach and his team of advisors and research consultants subscribe to a core belief. He says, "At Emergence PT we utilize our array of equipment and devices to design rehabilitation and performance programs to meet the need of each individual. It's technology harnessed to quantify how the body moves in relation to itself and to its environment."

Family Businesses Face Unique Challenges; Coaching Can Help

by ANGELIKA OLSEN — Family Business Coach

ometimes taken for granted, family-owned businesses are a bigger player in the U.S. economy. An article in Inc.com states that according to the U.S. Bureau of the Census, about 90 percent of American families are family-owned or controlled, and other sources put it at 80-90 percent. As such, big names that you would recognize, such as Kraft, Goldman Sachs or Nordstrom, but most are much smaller and seem to fly under the radar. Yet collectively, they are significant and are characterized by qualities that set them apart. Each family, and their business, is unique. Their stories are life stories that weave a broad and colorful tapestry. Yet, they share a common thread. They all face challenges that only families who work together and share financial stakes encounter.

What’s Unique About Family Business

Most generational family businesses were founded by a strong, visionary leader with focus and a whole lot of drive. These are the primary assets that make up the unique personality traits of a successful business founder. To these folks, their business is their life’s work and is directly tied to their identity. They are what they have built. Often, the drive that led to their success was born out of desperation.

But what fuels a first-generation leader’s success doesn’t lend itself to continuity. The successful transition to ‘gen. two’ and beyond depends largely upon the shared goals and values of the next generation. Long-term planning, development and grooming to prepare next gen leaders for their role is critical. Statistics show that roughly two-thirds of family businesses don’t survive past the second generation. Most are sold, divided and renamed, or simply go out of business during the second generation’s tenure. A single key factor tends to contribute to those odds, but more on that later…

Another unique quality of family business is that it is typically part of the family. It is often referred to as “one of the kids,” “the favorite child” or “the third sibling in a family of four.” Family businesses are typically built from home, in the basement or the garage, where its daily operational dramas play out within the family and life. Kids don’t step into the family business at maturity, they have grown up with it.

My Family Business Story

My own experience was of this nature. Having been born into a family wherein my parents started a home building business from scratch, kitchen-table conversations were always centered on the business. I grew up knowing far more about the concerns and struggles of my family’s business than an 8-year-old should. In fact, some 50 years later, I can still tell you the names of our cabinet maker, framer and carpet supplier. No member of our nuclear family could escape it. And, although not technically owners, I think we all felt responsible for it. It was part of our family system; the business and its urgent problems took precedence over typical family priorities. Over time, the strain of a family business wore on our relationships, but at the same time, ironically, it was the glue that held us together and kept us connected.

Years later, my early career in international logistics came to an unexpected close when much of the management of our family business landed on my shoulders. After several years in that role, our family business story ended like most others. It was re-structured under new ownership, the original entity dissolved and with it another family business legacy ended.

But, like many children with an entrepreneurial upbringing, I too felt the need to start my own business. Together with my husband, while juggling children, life and his full-time job, we founded our own home building “side” business. It eventually surpassed the family business in size. We began 22 years ago in the Portland area. Then in 2007, we relocated to Central Oregon where (after the great recession) we continued building under the name, BendTrend Homes.

All these firsthand experiences, both good and bad, in varying family business roles, has led me to my current and most fulfilling work. I am an advisor to family business owners. What that means is that I help family business leaders navigate family-related business hurdles and difficult transitions.

Family Business Challenges are Universal

Interestingly, even though each family and their business are unique, the challenges they face follow predictable patterns. That’s because we are all human. In a family business scenario, our human qualities affect both the family and the business. At the heart of every family business challenge lies some degree of conflict or lack of alignment that manifests itself in a gamut of problems for which clients might call for help such as:

- Married couples who have different management styles
- Father-daughter partnerships where job titles and decision-making boundaries are blurry, even disregarded
- Retirement-ready business couples who employ their adult children but have no defined exit strategy in place
- Recent college graduates who are next gen leaders of a multigenerational holding company and must find a way to work together as a team for their lifetime
- A successful family business founder whose business success is outpacing her own leadership skills and must develop greater capacity to manage her staff

If you are unclear or unable to do what they ask, share that with them. No professional in this space expects you to have all the answers. Professionals do want to let you work on what you can, and they don’t want to charge you for unnecessary time.

One of the big tasks that you will be responsible for is to help your team of professionals identify all of the property and people. Be thorough. It is important to get this done right early on, to avoid unwanted surprises later in the administration. Finding a new beneficiary or piece of property further along in the process can add more time.

With the planning in hand, a team of your own professionals and the property and people identified, you should be well on your way to successfully administering your parent’s estate. Remember that no professional expects you to have all the answers. Though it is a daunting task, work with your team and they will help you through it.

Getting Help for Your Own Business Family

I get to meet a lot of people (mostly on Zoom) and learn of many different family business situations. The number one mistake I see is that they wait too long to ask for help. Family business coaching is most valuable when engaged pro-actively before there are acute problems.

In situations where conversations are difficult, my colleague and I facilitate family meetings, bringing people back together so that they can align for a common purpose or to keep the family unified.

Coaching Can Help

- An heir-apparent who routinely fails to show up for work but continues to draw a paycheck from the family business

The core to resolving each of these problems is communication. I work with leaders, their families and their stakeholders to build stronger communication skills. I resource the system with skills and training to grow self-awareness, analyze and improve communication style. The goal is to develop everyone’s leadership potential so that, moving forward, they are equipped to face the hurdles that lie ahead. When fostering conflict or an ongoing lack of alignment prevails, it eventually leads to tensions that ultimately undermine the success of the business and the family.

Sometimes when clients call for help, they cannot pinpoint the problem. Rather, they might express that they “face challenges” or that they “feel stuck” or “overwhelmed.”

In these cases, I use coaching techniques intended to help broaden a client’s perspective. This often leads to greater clarity and a more objective point of view. We call that “the view from the balcony,” when you can step out of yourself to observe your own role in the situation. With that kind of clarity, new paths forward begin to emerge. New perspectives and a greater range of solutions come into sight. Where paradox and conflict were a barrier, empathy and understanding can begin to take its place.

BTL Liners in Prineville is a multigenerational family business that has grown up alongside Central Oregon. As our region has expanded, so has BTL Liners, which manufactures liners, covers and tarps of all sizes. In 1981, Ron and Lynne Perlatti started the business as Bend Tarp and Liner, located in a 1,500-square-foot leased space on Cady Way at the north end of Bend. Since that time, BTL Liners has outgrown several locations, and new family members have continued to step up to run the company.

The Perlatti’s business grew year-over-year, with the high demand for truck tarp driving sales back in the lumber days, and then when they created the first pond liners available in Central Oregon, fabricated from the original tarp material. Needing more space, the Perlattis moved their company to a 6,000-square-foot building on Ninth Street in Bend in the mid-’80s, and in the early 1990s, the Perlatti’s son, Brad Elliott, and his wife, Jan, came on board and worked in the family business. After five years, Brad and Jan purchased the company in 1997.

“We had worked in the family business for five years learning all aspects of the small business,” says Jan. “We had about eight employees then, and two of them are still with us today.” She continues, “We owned several other buildings in Bend, and after moving to two larger buildings — one on Layton Avenue and the other 30,000-square-foot facility on Sockeye and 18th — we could no longer find property in Bend to house our needs. We realized we had outgrown the industrial space the City of Bend had to offer.”

To solve their need for a larger space, 16 years ago, the Elliotts purchased a parcel of about nine acres in Prineville next to the airport in the Tom McCall Business Park, and had SunWest Builders build them an 84,000-square-foot facility. “At the time, we were the first business in that area,” says Jan. “Now, we are across the street from Facebook, which came in years later, and other new buildings are springing up all around us.”

BTL Liners — which can make the largest single panels in the industry at 150,000 square feet — continues to grow every year, Jan says, as the agriculture business and water-retention needs continue to escalate. The company motto is “No Job is too big or too small,” and Jan says they use every inch of their 84,000 square feet. The state-of-the-art fabrication and welding facility allows BTL Liners to compete not only regionally and nationally, but also internationally.

“The business runs smoothly year after year due to the dedication of all the employees of BTL,” she says. “Many have been on the team for decades! We pay well and value what each individual brings to the table. We are always seeking the best personnel in the industry.” Throughout the pandemic, she says BTL Liners has made the needed adjustments to keep the doors open.

Now, with the new year, BTL Liners has shifted yet again into the hands of the next generation. As of January 1, 2022, the company was acquired by...
For identical twins Lori and Lisa Lubbesmeyer, they say opening a business together was tantamount to locking themselves in a room together until they learned to get along.

"From outside appearances, it looks like we live this amazing life, it looks idyllic, but we have had some major hurdles as family and in business," says Lori. "There were many times when we thought this wasn't working, and almost gave up. But thankfully, we have worked hard enough at it that here we are approaching 23 years. It feels like it's getting easier, and that is tremendous."

“We started working together because we had so much conflict in our relationship that we didn’t want to spend time with each other. We genuinely didn’t like each other, “ says Lisa with a laugh. “So we literally shoved ourselves into a room over the past 23 years until we figured it out. The phrase ‘go to your room’ rings true for us. Now, it’s easy to imagine that we could be doing this for another 23 years or more.” Lori adds, “The fact that we have made it this long working together is pretty amazing and important to me."

In working through and overcoming their differences, the Lubbesmeyers, who co-own Lubbesmeyer Art Studio & Gallery in the Old Mill District, say they have learned invaluable lessons that carry over into their creative work and their relationships with others too. “One of the big things that I am continuously surprised by is that even though Lori knows me better than anybody in my whole life and vice versa, it’s never a good idea that I make assumptions about what she is going to do or think or say, or how she sees the world," says Lisa. "It is a challenge for me to be mindful of that. That is usually what gets me into trouble in working with a family member. I have learned so much in this lesson in terms of being a better person in the world. If I can’t assume things about Lori successfully, I have no business doing that to anybody else.” She continues, “The richness and wonderful thing about that is that if I’m doing it right, I get to meet people for who they are and where they are, and just listen and appreciate instead of running on assumptions. I’m so grateful to have had this lesson by working in such a close relationship; I don’t think I could have gotten it in any other way."

Lori agrees that avoiding assumptions feels like a foundational philosophy to them both at this point. “Lisa said it: If we make false assumptions, it impacts our familial position and the business. It’s incredible how deeply this impacts us. Because we’ve learned this lesson the hard way over and over again, I think it’s one of the things that helps us to be good at what we do with our clients and the people coming through the door, because we translate this to everybody. We are just kind of open to what each person presents. I cannot underscore enough how big of a challenge this has been for us."

When it comes to making plans, however, because they work together and have spent their entire lives together, they know each other so well that they

Travis and Chelsea Wilcox, the Elliott’s daughter and son-in-law. “They have both worked in the business since 2001, since graduating from Bend High and Mountain View High. Three years ago, they purchased part of the business and have exceeded all of our expectations. They are very excited to take the business to the next level.” She adds, “Travis is president, leads 25 employees and is on top of his game for sure!”

The Elliotts are excited to have the third generation now taking over, Jan says, “And their two teenage boys have expressed interest in the business too! Our greatest triumphs are carrying on the business to the next generation and maintaining the best reputation in the industry.”

tend to think alike. “We assume that we can do things that are basically ridiculous and maybe not even wise choices because we are on the same page,” says Lisa. “For example, we used to show at art festivals, and we would think nothing of knowing we had a 20-hour drive ahead of us, but we’d create up until the last minute, load the car and then start our drive at 3 in the morning to get there at exactly when we needed to in order to make our appointment.” She adds, “What would start out as a long, grueling road trip would end up a giggle fest across the country. I can think of no other situation where I could do this with anybody else in my life; even the poor judgment behind it,” she jokes. “Conversely, we’ve had major yelling and screaming fights in the car spanning across a whole state too. There is the yin and yang to everything. We keep it real here.”

The Lubbesmeyers, who both studied art at the University of Oregon, with Lori earning her degree in oil painting and Lisa studying printmaking, agree that not avoiding the tough stuff is part of working with family. “What we find, which is funny and aggravating, is when we are running into issues with one another that have to do with business or a professional aspect, invariably, it has to get drilled down to working on a problem that essentially began when we were 5 or 7,” says Lisa. “We have to drill down as far as possible to the issue and resolve it,” adds Lori. “We have had the deepest depths of grief with one another, but also the greatest highs of joy together.” These experiences, the twins agree, are what now help them work together so successfully.

Another aspect in learning how to work well together that they had to master is determining their individual roles in the business. “We might both think we are really great at bookkeeping, or marketing, or whatever,” says Lisa. “It has taken us awhile to determine what specific roles we are each best at. In our case, we had our blenders on in terms of what we are truly good at.” Lori adds, “It was ego that initially made us both think we were great at everything. In this case, letting go of that ego, and honoring the fact that one of us is better at something than the other, helped us set our boundaries.”

At their studio and gallery, Lisa and Lori create collaborative art through a process of building over each other’s work, layer upon layer. They find inspiration in nature, Japanese block print, music of all genres, the texture of leaves and grasses, the pattern of light on the foothills, ethnic designs and patterns, the juxtaposition of old and new, architectural fragments, the elegance and grace of birds, road trips — both solitary and shared — and the patterns of turned farmland.

In weathering the pandemic, the twins say the past two years have helped them home in on what is important, and they have made some changes in business and in life as a result. “Business is going great. The pandemic forced us to do things we weren’t typically doing,” says Lisa. “What that has meant for us is that over the past few years, we’ve been more thoughtful about how we spend our time, both within and outside the studio. Since we are creative, both those elements have helped reenergize and inspire our work.”

Lori says that they have been able to adapt to the conditions, relying upon the internet with a virtual gallery, and connecting with people more via email instead of face to face. “Somehow, especially in the past year, we found our new footing, in terms of how we look at what we want to do going forward,” she says. Lisa adds, “It feels like because of the pandemic, we have created a more sustainable model for ourselves regarding business and how we’ll go forward for the next many years. What we fell upon seems more functional. It feels like a healthier balance; we were putting so much time and effort into areas of our business that we ultimately realized weren’t entirely necessary. The pandemic stripped us down effectively.”

Part of that process was scaling back on their business hours. The studio and gallery, located in an upstairs loft in the Old Mill, are open Wednesday of how we look at what we want to do going forward,” she says. Central Oregon Arts & Culture

Art in South County Begins in Sunriver

Central Oregon has an amazing variety of art across the entire tri-county region. The outlying areas, however, each put their own unique spin on art. This is true in South Deschutes County, where La Pine and Sunriver both create their own signature in the art community. Interested art devotees could make a day of art with a simple drive over Lava Butte to visit Sunriver.

The Artists’ Gallery Sunriver (AGSR) has the largest amount of variety in the South County. The gallery is a cooperative with over 30 members and commission artists, and it has been in business for 11 years. Coop co-manager Jim Fister says that AGSR can be characterized as, "an art gallery, but not THAT kind of art gallery." It's an affordable and accessible gallery that appeals to almost everyone.

The gallery is nestled in The Village at Sunriver, a vibrant mall with plenty of shopping for individuals and families. It has been recently renovated with a brighter look, but as always the focus is on the variety of art and artists. With such a large number of offerings, visitors can expect to find art that appeals to almost any taste and price range. The gallery itself is staffed by the artists themselves, which enables patrons to interact with knowledgeable people who love the art that they and their colleagues create.

Several of the artists in AGSR show all over the state and the nation. Others are exclusive to the gallery, preferring to focus on producing local art for local customers. All of the artists reside in Central Oregon, from La Pine to Tumalo and Redmond, and of course Bend. There are a variety of painters using various mediums and styles, but the gallery is not just limited to that. The gallery also has a variety of ceramic artists, woodworkers, glass and mosaic artists, and some additional unique art not found in other galleries in the area. The artists are happy to discuss techniques and many offer classes to help others bring out their artistic talent.

Artists Gallery Sunriver hosts a reception on the second Saturday of each month from 4-6pm, with expanded hours in the summer. Customers can interact with a number of the artists while being inspired and entertained with artist demonstrations, light food and beverages. The gallery is fairly unique in that it only briefly interrupted its receptions due to COVID. Fister notes that the artists did, and still do, take precautions per county and state guidelines while still offering a fun reception experience. “We view the receptions as our way of having friends of art come and visit our home, so they can see that it’s their home as well.”

There are other art and jewelry stores in The Village, and many summer nights offer live music, outdoor events and other attractions that enable families and individuals to make it a full evening. Notably, the Wooden Jewel recently relocated from its downtown Bend location back to its original home in The Village, and they will be participating in the Second Saturday festivities by springtime.

Artists' Gallery Sunriver

Festival to showcase the art of the most-recent poster artist, David Kreitzer. In December, the lower gallery featured the fourth-to-eighth-grade finalists of the Central Oregon Young Artists' Challenge, designed to encourage local students to build their art skills. The finalists were treated to an opening reception where they could interact with the public. Several of the pieces from the exhibit sold, proving that artists of any age can make compelling work that appeals to collectors.

The Betty Gray Gallery hosts a variety of receptions and events throughout the year as the art rotates. Typically, there is new content every six to eight weeks for visitors to enjoy. The gallery will continue to work with other local artists and musicians to provide enjoyable experiences for all visitors.

There are other events that serve to highlight art and the interconnectedness of the South County region. The Sunriver Women's Club hosts an annual Art and Wine event in May where they offer artist demos, wine experiences and other opportunities. This fundraising event supports the South County community in a variety of ways. The Artists' Gallery itself also sponsors a Locals' Weekend every October to raise money and donations for the local food bank.

A typical visit to art-interested enthusiasts to Sunriver could look like this: A family or group of friends could drive the pass early in the afternoon in time to have lunch at any number of unique restaurants. An easy bike ride could take them around the river itself to view wildlife and a truly spectacular view of Mt. Bachelor. After an enjoyable stop at the Lodge to view Betty Gray Gallery and Thompson Studio Glass, they could proceed down the road to visit the unique galleries and shops in that area as well. Or they could make an evening at the Sunriver Observatory to view the stars in the spectacular night sky.
The Sunriver Area Chamber of Commerce and Cascade Publications Inc. are seeking a photograph to appear on the front cover of the annual Sunriver Magazine — which serves as the Sunriver area visitor’s guide.

The photo should capture the area’s spirit of Family, Fun and Adventure, or just a beautiful photo of the landscape. The chosen photographer will receive a profile in the magazine as well as in Cascade A&E Magazine, $250 and a half-page ad in Sunriver Magazine.

Photographers are invited to submit a low-resolution photo for the contest, with the understanding the winning photograph must meet the minimum requirements of 8.875 inches wide by 11.375 inches high and 300dpi.

The deadline to submit a photograph is 5pm February 25.

Please send photos to jeff@cascadebusnews.com and include your name and phone number.

High Desert Oregon Museum Exhibit
Invites Visitors to Consider Concepts of Community

The COVID-19 pandemic, which has shaped our lives in so many ways, has precipitated a moment of asking questions — about who we are and who we want to be as individuals and as a society. It has highlighted the importance of community, and perhaps prompted us to reflect on the communities we want to be a part of and create.

These questions are relevant, and they are not new. In the new, original exhibit Imagine a World, that opened January 29, the High Desert Museum examines efforts over the decades to create ideal societies throughout the Western United States — and what we can learn from them. And through an interactive element, Imagine a World gives visitors the opportunity to articulate what kind of world we want to live in for the future.

For generations, people have journeyed to the High Desert and Western United States with visions of founding their own utopias, ranging from the Kaweah Co-Operative Colony in central California in the late 1860s to the artistic and back-to-the-land communities of the 1960s and 1970s, such as Drop City.

The exhibition looks at the ambitions, intentions and outcomes of utopian and intentional communities across the West, delving into approaches ranging from ecological to spiritual to political. Some groups focused on creating an ideal society, while others searched for an idyllic place already in existence to call home.

“The intentional communities featured in the exhibit all pose interesting questions,” says Laura Ferguson, Ph.D., Museum senior curator of Western history and curator of Imagine a World. “By exploring the ideas that inspired each group, we’re able to consider what we might learn from each society and imagine more possibilities. Ultimately, we hope the exhibition sparks conversations about what kind of world we want to live in today.”

Imagine a World explores philosophies around community and how they’ve been put into practice. One is ecological laboratories, such as Biosphere 2 in Arizona. In that instance, eight people in 1991 sealed themselves for more than two years into a vast structure of glass pyramids and buildings. They were attempting to thrive as a closed ecosystem that could create its own oxygen and grow enough food to support the inhabitants. It didn’t fully succeed in those aims, but the facility continues to be a hub of scientific research today.

The exhibit also explores spiritually oriented endeavors, such as Oregon’s most famous (or infamous) intentional community — Rajneeshpuram. In 1981, Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh, a spiritual teacher with an international following, left India for the famous (or infamous) intentional community — Rajneeshpuram. In 1981, Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh, a spiritual teacher with an international following, left India for the

They embraced geodesic domes, advanced by the architect Buckminster Fuller, as the building style that would make up the community. They constructed the domes from salvaged wood and scrap metal, taking pride in living off other people’s trash. While Drop City dissolved by 1971, ideas that germinated there continue to flourish today.

In addition to examining physical settlements, Imagine a World will feature several Native artists who envision alternative worlds and recognize the ways that cosmology, science and futurism have long been part of Indigenous worldviews and oral traditions. Called Indigenous futurisms, the artists imagine Native people well into the future, including in the realms of science fiction and outer space.

As the culmination of the exhibit, visitors will be invited to contribute what they believe should be included in an ideal society through an interactive, immersive experience.

“The history of Rajneeshpuram in Oregon’s High Desert led us to explore broader questions of communities,” said Museum Executive Director Dana Whitelaw, Ph.D. “Imagine a World examines different groups that have come to the High Desert inspiring visitors to ask their own questions about what can community look like and how do we work to create it.”

Imagine a World (highdesertmuseum.org/imagine-a-world) will be on display through September 25.

Budget Check Up:
Tax Time is the Right Time

by ED WETTIG, CFP — Cornerstone Financial Planning Group

Every year, about 150 million households file their federal tax returns. For many, the process involves digging through shoe boxes or manila folders full of receipts; gathering mortgage, retirement and investment account statements; and relying on computer software to take advantage of every tax break the code permits. It seems a shame not to make the most of all that effort.

Tax preparation may be the only time of year many households gather all their financial information in one place. That makes it a perfect time to take a critical look at how much money is coming in and where it’s all going. In other words, this is a great time to give the household budget a checkup.

Six-Step Process

A thorough budget checkup involves six steps.

   Start by dividing expenses into useful categories. Some possibilities: home, auto, food, household, debt, clothes, pets, entertainment and charity. Don’t forget savings and investments. It may also be helpful to create subcategories. Housing, for example, can be divided into mortgage, taxes, insurance, utilities and maintenance.

2. Following the Money.
   Go through all the receipts and statements gathered to prepare taxes and get a better understanding of where the money went last year. Track everything. Be as specific as possible, and don’t forget to account for the cost of a latte on the way to the office each day.

3. Projecting Expenses Forward.
   Knowing how much was spent per budget category can provide a useful template for projecting future expenses. Go through each category. Are expenses likely to rise in the coming year? If so, by how much? The results of this projection will form the basis of a budget for the coming year.

4. Determining Expected Income.
   Add together all sources of income. Make sure to use net income.

5. Doing the Math.
   It’s time for the moment of truth. Subtract projected expenses from expected income. If expenses exceed income, it may be necessary to consider changes. Prioritize categories and look to reduce those with the lowest importance until the budget is balanced.

6. Sticking to It.
   If it’s not in the budget, don’t spend it. If it’s an emergency, make adjustments elsewhere.

Tax time can provide an excellent opportunity. You have a chance to give your household budget a thorough checkup. In taking control of your money, you may find you are able to devote more of it to the pursuit of your financial goals.

VOLUNTEERS IN MEDICINE

$2,000 was raised to help Volunteers in Medicine (VIM) care for the medically uninsured in Central Oregon through their digital health program. The funds will be used to provide lifesaving medical care, such as diabetes and blood-pressure management, to the uninsured. Staff from 10 Barrel donated their time to ensure the program’s success including Gabie Lazard, General Manager 10 Barrel Westside Pub, Jeff Hakala, Regional Pub Manager (the nephew of our founding Medical Director, Bob Hakala, MD); and the entire 10 Barrel team. “The 10 Barrel Westside Team really enjoyed getting to work with the awesome staff and volunteers,” said Gabie Lazard, general manager of 10 Barrel Westside Pub. “Every quarter we choose a nonprofit that makes a difference in our community and, with the help of our guests, raise money and awareness for the great work they are doing. Volunteers in Medicine provide a vital resource in Bend, and we are thankful to have gotten to work together!”

About 10 Barrel Brewing, Co and Drink it Forward

Going back to our local community has always been a priority for 10 Barrel. We started the Drink It Forward program as a way for our Brew Pubs to support local charities through proceeds of their draft beer sales. Each quarter they have selected different charities to support and have even brewed collaboration beers as a way to spread the love and stay connected to our communities. Since our brew pubs have recently reduced operations due to the COVID-19 pandemic, a portion of proceeds from all 10 Barrel products sold in each of our pubs will support local charities through the Drink it Forward charity partnership. Continuing our support for the communities that have supported us, through the good times and the bad.

EVERY CHILD CENTRAL OREGON

Every Child Central Oregon is the grateful recipient of a $500.00 grant from St. Charles for iPads to be distributed to Central Oregon Youth impacted by foster care. Youth experiencing foster care utilize technology such as tablets in several ways, educationally, therapeutically, and for virtual visitations with their family of origin. Throughout the COVID-19 pandemic, there has been an increased need for up-to-date technology to facilitate virtual visitation due to limited in-person visitation during shutdowns and quarantines. Additionally, youth in care also experience virtual visitation needs due to their family of origin living out of the area and/or experiencing increased incarceration. Through the generous St. Charles grant, Every Child Central Oregon can also provide adequate technology to support the academic goals of youth impacted by foster care.

Every Child Central Oregon serves Deschutes, Crook, Jefferson counties and The Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs by mobilizing community to uplift and support those impacted by foster care. Every Child Central Oregon relentlessly advocates and supports local children and families impacted by foster care committing to finding safe, nurturing homes where they can flourish during their time in care. Additionally, ECCO provides radical hospitality to youth in care, families providing care, families of origin, and their partners working in child welfare. With over 400 children experiencing foster care annually in Central Oregon, ECCO believes everyone has an opportunity to connect with, and support, the foster community: creating a more positive outcome for our community as a whole.

DAISY Award Winners Honored for Extraordinary Nursing

Our St. Charles Health System nurses have been honored with The DAISY Award for Extraordinary Nurses, recognizing the outstanding, compassionate nursing care they provide patients and families every day:

- Bend: Page Ogden, Lactation
- Madras: Emily O’Hearn, Family Birthing Center
- Prineville: Jennifer Lewis Welch, Float
- Redmond: Jessica Aragon, Medical Services

Nominated by patients, families and colleagues, the award recipients were chosen by a committee at St. Charles. The nurses — who represent all four St. Charles hospitals in Bend, Redmond, Madras and Prineville — were recognized with a ceremony on their respective units and presented with a certificate, a pin and a “healer’s touch” sculpture by their hospital’s chief nursing officer. The DAISY honorees will also receive ongoing benefits, such as special rates for tuition and American Nurses Credentialing Center (ANCC) certification.

The DAISY Foundation is a not-for-profit organization that was established in memory of J. Patrick Barnes by members of his family. Patrick died at the age of 33 in late 1999 from complications of Idiopathic Thrombocytopenic Purpura (ITP), a little-known but not uncommon auto-immune disease. (DAISY is an acronym for Diseases Attacking the Immune System.) The care Patrick and his family received from nurses while he was ill inspired this unique means of thanking nurses for the remarkable skill and care nurses provide patients every day and night, “When Patrick was critically ill, our family experienced first-hand the remarkable skill and care nurses provide patients every day and night,” said Bonnie Barnes, FAAN, president and co-founder of The DAISY Foundation. “Yet these unsung heroes are seldom recognized for the super-human, extraordinary, compassionate work they do. The kind of work the nurses at St. Charles are called on to do every day epitomizes the purpose of The DAISY Award.”

This is one initiative of The DAISY Foundation to express gratitude to the nursing profession. Additionally, DAISY offers J. Patrick Barnes Grants for Nursing Research and Evidence-Based Practice Projects, The DAISY Faculty Award to honor inspiring faculty members in schools and colleges of nursing and The DAISY in Training Award for nursing students. More information is available at DAISYfoundation.org.

- Biotechnology (pharma and medical device);
- Recreational/outdoor equipment and apparel;
- Brewing and distilling;

Kelly Sparks Associate VP, Finance & Strategic Planning for OSU-Cascades, said the Innovation District is integral into the long-range development plan for the university’s Central Oregon branch campus and City master plan. She said, “We originally had the option for a compact campus university of 50- 60 acres, but as the opportunity to expand into adjacent property, which included the governor's historic campus, became apparent we were able to work towards an expansive 128-acre model, which could be more integrated and permeable with the community.

As an OSU-Cascades university our mission is first and foremost for the benefit of students, so a primary focus is cultivating opportunities for experiential learning and entering the workforce, including internship openings arising from co-location. “We are community-serving as a public institution and look for ways to leverage community development opportunities, such as through communal use of space and access to maker resources. The Innovation District collaborative effort is instrumental in building our own high-quality, highly-educated workforce with targeted in-demand skills sets and expanding industries, including commercializing new ideas, and this can be a powerful economic generator for Central Oregon.”

Sparks said the next steps would involve agreeing upon the clean-up method for the land earmarked for the first phase of the Innovation District and identifying funding sources for the remediation and installation of basic infrastructure necessary for development, including site access. “The Innovation District has also been among the most challenging to remediate as there is some 100 ft depth of waste and it is the part of the former landfill site with most “pyrolitic” conditions — as in carrying high temperatures underground due to the chemical processes of decomposition over time.

Student-derived funds cannot be used for the development of the Innovation District so Sparks said the college will be pursuing Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) grants — the caps for which were hopefully to be increased under the new administration — as well as state support and revenue bonding with secured real estate agreements.

OSU-Cascades estimates the buildout of the Innovation District to cost an additional $235 million to realize the planned amount of public and private industry space anticipated. Sparks added, “We are seeking ideally to secure funding this fiscal year for initial land development and then further progress on the financial front over the next two years, with a view to starting construction on the first Innovation District buildings in 2025.

We have strong support from Oregon senators, and state economic development agencies. The region has also been a strong partner.

“It is incredible entrepreneurial activity in Bend already and active relocation of businesses to the area, and kudos to EDCO for their part in that continued success. “Bolstered by the Innovation District, OSU-Cascades adds new opportunities for the commercialization of product ideas from the region and the supporting of businesses to the area, and kudos to EDCO for their part in that continued success. “We have strong support from Oregon senators, and state economic development agencies. water for growing urban communities. The team will also fund critical elements of drought management, including enhanced metering and monitoring of water diversions, the ability to better forecast climate conditions and drought impacts on reservoir and river levels and a strategy to tie these forecasts to needed responses in an accessible and web-based platform.

The final establishment of a comprehensive bank builds on and ties together the extensive water management work already happening in the basin. Irrigation districts are aggressively piping canals to conserve water. DRC, Central Oregon Irrigation District and Deschutes Soil and Water Conservation District are funding and implementing on-farm efficiency programs that save additional water. The Deschutes 2022 water bank pilot is underway, providing interested Central Oregon Irrigation District patrons a cash payment to forego use of their water to help North Unit Irrigation District and the river. Additional long-standing programs include the DRC’s Annual Instream Water Leasing Program that compensates and ties in Groundwater Mitigation Program that provides a framework for cities to secure new water supplies. The market-based tools rely on the use of incentives to allow for water to move on a voluntary basis from less-valued uses to higher-valued uses. The Deschutes Water Bank will tie these efforts together, providing a coordinated umbrella to allow basin partners to meet river and community water needs, while greatly increasing water resiliency in the face of climate change and more frequent drought conditions.

The funding could not have come at a better time. Central Oregon is currently in a drought of historical significance. Extraordinary low precipitation, coupled with record-setting heat waves, and Extraordinary low precipitation, coupled with record-setting heat waves, and extraordinary low precipitation, coupled with record-setting heat waves, and Extraordinary low precipitation, coupled with record-setting heat waves, coupled with extraordinary low precipitation, coupled with record-setting heat waves, coupled with extraordinary low precipitation, coupled with record-setting heat waves, coupled with extraordinary low precipitation, coupled with record-setting heat waves, coupled with extraordinarily low precipitation, coupled with record-setting heat waves, coupled with extraordinarily low precipitation, coupled with record-setting heat waves, coupled with extraordinarily low precipitation, coupled with record-setting heat waves, led to a challenge we have not seen before. The water bank will raise much needed revenue to help address the challenges we face. The DRC and Deschutes Water Bank are partnering with agricultural communities, critical impacts to fish and wildlife throughout the basin, declining groundwater levels and increased uncertainty for municipal and agricultural water supplies. According to water experts, forecasts for this summer offer no indication that this hot and dry trend will end soon.

“We are living in unprecedented times in the Western United States,” said Kate Fitzpatrick, executive director of the Deschutes River Conservancy. “The status quo system of water management is not working for rivers in the Deschutes Basin, and I think we’re seeing the consequences in our depleted rivers and in dried up, allowed wildfires. Wildfire water banking is one of the ways we envision moving into a more resilient future. Paired with water conservation projects (irrigation district piping and on-farm efficiency improvements) and better stewardship, we feel confident that there will be the water supplies needed for rivers, farms and communities. We are proud to model with our partners how communities can come together to solve difficult water issues.”

Craig Horrell, president of the Deschutes Basin Board of Control said, “Deschutes Basin irrigation districts are committed to adapting to the changing climate, and taking a collaborative approach to improving water reliability in a way that does not preclude growing for the community and the environment. The $1.37 million investment in the Deschutes Basin will be utilized to find better and more efficient ways to move and monitor water for years to come.”

“Climate change presents growing challenges to our communities across the West and the natural systems that we all depend on,” said Assistant Secretary for Water and Science Tanya Trujillo. “The Department of the Interior will continue to work with our partners to develop innovative solutions that address the challenges we face.”

“We are excited to continue working with our partners in the basin to address multiple issues, including the need for long term water supply for the basin’s municipal water providers,” said Richard Ladbe, chair of the Central Oregon Conservation District and Deschutes Water Bank can be found at sunriversd.org.
